

Bond, Schoeneck & King leverages UniversitySite to serve hundreds of clients.

A new state training mandate became a revenue line worth as much as a Top 50 client — delivered on UniversitySite.

Overview

Bond is a reputable law firm with a long history, having been founded in Syracuse, New York over a century ago. Initially known for its expertise in labor and employment law, the firm has since expanded its scope to include 33 practice areas across 11 industry groups, serving clients in five states through 15 offices.

In 2019, the state of New York enacted a law requiring all employers to provide sexual harassment training to their employees. Bond, which had previously offered in-person training to clients, saw the opportunity to expand its reach and created an online platform for the training program.

This resulted in a significant source of revenue for the firm — equivalent to that of a Top 50 client. Beyond the revenue, Bond needed a solution that could accommodate hundreds of clients with multiple learning plans and thousands of users.

“We’ve provided sexual harassment training to 20,000 people and received overwhelmingly positive feedback.”

Why UniversitySite

Asked why the firm continues the partnership, Bond's answer was direct: “We continue to do business with Profiscience because UniversitySite is the best fit for our needs.” In the firm's own words, “In just the first year, UniversitySite has exceeded our expectations for our online training programs,” and “The more I learn about UniversitySite, the more confident I feel in its capabilities.”

“We’ve been using UniversitySite for four years and I have had no reason to consider switching to another platform. It has proven to be able to handle all of our clients’ needs.”
